

Earn Your Rutgers University-Camden Bachelor's Degree in Political Science at Camden County College Beginning Fall 2017

Interested in a career in law, government service, national security, or public affairs? A bachelor's degree in political science from Rutgers-Camden prepares you for the practical and philosophical problems of political organization, action, and governance.

Starting in fall 2017 through the Rutgers at Camden County College Premier Partnership, students will be able to earn a B.A. in political science on site on the Blackwood campus.

The bachelor of arts in political science program builds an in-depth understanding of politics and government with challenging courses in public policy, international politics, and methodology. Students learn to think critically about the nature of citizenship, rights, and duties in the modern world—and against the backdrop of economic, political, security, and international crises.

Students in this major may also apply to receive the specialized Rutgers certificate program in National Security Studies, which provides additional credentials for a wide range of professional pursuits.

Graduates often pursue careers in civic organizations, city, state, or federal government departments and agencies, educational institutions, public interest groups, and with government contractors.

Students with a completed associate of arts and sciences (AAS) in paralegal studies from Camden County College can transfer up to 36 credits as restricted free electives toward their Rutgers degree!

Bridging the Gap for Rutgers at Camden County College

The Bridging the Gap scholarship program allows transfer students from Camden County College to earn their bachelor's degree while reducing Rutgers-Camden tuition in full or by half.
